GRAnderson Wealth Management Joins Bidding For Home Run Ball

DENVER, Colo. (March 7, 2008) – GRAnderson Wealth Management Group announced today that it will raise by $3,000 the bidding for the authenticated baseball that Barry Bonds hit in Denver for the 762nd home run of his career.

Denver-based GRAnderson, one of the area's leaders in alternative, private placement investments, is offering a total of $13,000 for the home run ball that Bonds hit Sept. 5, 2007 at Coors Field and that now stands as the all-time career home run record.

GRAnderson (no relation to the Detroit Tigers outfielder) specializes in recognizing high-potential investments for its clients, but in this case the investment in the Barry Bonds baseball is more of a tribute to sports posterity. Chief Executive Officer Gregory Anderson has long admired the contribution that Bonds made to baseball.

"It would be quite a thrill to be able to display this historic memento at the offices of GRAnderson Wealth Management Group," said Anderson.

GRAnderson's offer tops the previous two offers from Lake Arbor Auto ($10,000) and Alpine Waste & Recycling ($7,170). It is believed that the fan who caught the home run ball is likely a Denver resident, but that person has not stepped forward.

Anderson said he will defer to the tradition of asking the seller to set aside a portion of the proceeds for the Arvada Center's ArtSmart program for children, and that the seller match one dollar for each of Bonds' 1,996 career runs batted in.

If GRAnderson decides to sell the ball within 12 months, the company will donate 11% of the proceeds to The Gathering Place and HealthBridge Alliance charities.

The current owner of the Bonds home run ball should contact Steve Caulk of ProConnect Public Relations, representing GRAnderson, at 303-410-4971 to set up the exchange.
